Dear Peter,

I'm excited to hear that you're organizing activities for School Service Day. I think students will benefit a lot from this event.

For this event, I suggest organizing a clean-up activity. Students can work together to clean up litter on campus, which will help develop their sense of responsibility for keeping a clean environment. You could also consider setting up recycling workshops. Students can use recyclable materials to create useful items. It will raise everyone's awareness about recycling.

I believe the event will provide an excellent opportunity for students to learn about the importance of labor and environmental protection. I do hope that my suggestions will be helpful.

Yours,

Li Hua

题目②

It's important to put what we've learned into practice. Last summer, I noticed my grandfather spend a whole day watering his garden. It made me wonder whether I could do anything to make him less tired. In my science class, I had just learned about how water moves and how pressure works. Armed with this knowledge, I drew a basic design for a new watering system. Eager to improve my plan, I talked to my friends and searched on the Internet for more information. Finally, one Saturday afternoon, I put everything together and tested the watering system. The moment it started working, my grandfather's eyes lit up. He said that it was a gift he truly liked.

This experience has taught me a valuable lesson — knowledge comes alive when put into practice. I was inspired to explore further ways to use my knowledge to make a difference in our life.
