“Thank you, young man,” she said. “Where did you learn such nice manners (礼貌) ?”

“My parents,” said David.

“Well, they taught you well,” said the lady. “What's your name?” “David, ma'am.”

“You even say ma'am!” she exclaimed (惊呼). “I'm Mrs. Watson. Pleased to meet you, David.” “Me, too, ma'am,” answered David.

At the next stop, the person next to Mrs. Watson got off the bus. “Here, son, ” she said to David. “Have a seat.”

Once David was seated, Mrs. Watson looked at him and asked, “What else did your parents teach you about manners?”

“They taught me about saying 'yes, ma'am' and 'no, sir'—and 'please' and 'thank you' and 'you're welcome', of course, ” answered David. “And they taught me to address (称呼) grown-ups by their last names, like 'Mr. or Mrs. Smith'.”

“Good,” said Mrs. Watson. Nodding her head in approval (赞同). “Did they teach you about opening doors for other people?”

“Yes, ma'am, they did,” said David. “The other kids look at me funny sometimes when I open doors for them, but I don't mind. Grown-ups always like it.”

“Well, you keep opening doors for the other kids, David,” said Mrs. Watson. “You're setting a good example for them.”

The next bus stop was in front of the city library. “This is where I get off,” said David, standing up. “It was nice to meet you.” A young woman came toward the back door, and David walked aside to let her pass.

In the park, you see a group of people, all looking up at the sky. Without thinking about it, you look upwards, too. Why? In the theater, someone begins to clap hands and suddenly the whole room joins in. You do, too. Why?

Sometimes we feel we are acting correctly when we do the same as others. The more people follow an idea, the better or truer we think the idea is. It's the social proof (社会认同感) that works.

The scientist Asch carried out an experiment (实验) . It shows how social proof can influence us. In a room, a man sees Line 1, and next to it are three lines (A, B, C) . A is longer, C is shorter and B is as long as Line 1. He must tell which of the three lines is as long as Line 1. When the man is alone, he gives the correct answer B. Then, five other men go into the room, and each of them gives the answer C as they were told to. Now the man changes (改变) his idea and gives the answer C. Asch got the same result many times among different people.

Why do we act like this? Well, in the past, following others was a way to keep away from danger. Suppose that 5, 000 years ago you were hunting (打猎) with friends. Suddenly, they all ran away. What would you have done? Would you have stayed? No, you would have run, too. We are descendants (后代) of those who copied others' action. It is so deeply planted in our mind that we still use it now.

Social proof has special power. For example, people often make use of it in their ads. So be careful when someone says his product (产品) is “the most popular”.

46. At the beginning of the passage, the writer leads in the topic by _____ .

- A. telling a story
- B. giving examples
- C. answering questions
- D. showing a map

47. According to Paragraph 3, the experiment by Asch shows _____ .

- A. following others is always right
- B. social proof may change people's ideas
- C. it's difficult to carry out the experiment
- D. people can study better if they are alone

48. The underlined word “It” in Paragraph 4 refers (指代) to _____ .

- A. running with others
- B. hunting with friends
- C. copying others' action
- D. doing something different

49. According to the passage, we can infer (推断) that _____ .

- A. products in the ads are the best
- B. it's important to run with others anytime
- C. we mustn't copy others' action to keep safe
- D. we need to think twice before following others

Today many young people are starting book clubs. Members of a book club read the same book. Then they meet and talk about the book. Sharing ideas about a book with friends is fun. There are many other good reasons for children to join a book club.

Being in a book club improves (提升) reading skills. By spending a lot of time reading books to get ready for a book-club meeting, students improve their ability of faster and more correct reading. Reading can also help you to understand the meanings of new words.

Do you ever (曾经) struggle to finish the books you start? Joining a book club might help you to finish reading a book. If you do not read the whole book, you will not be able to talk about the book at the meeting. The wish to be ready will push you to finish reading it.

Book clubs help members read different kinds of books. In many book clubs, each member takes a turn choosing the book for the group to read. Reading about new or unknown topics makes learning happen. It helps you to get to know new writers and think about new ideas.

Book-club meetings can help you practise listening and speaking in a respectful (尊敬的) way. At book-club meetings members talk about the books they read. Sometimes members have different ideas, so they have interesting discussions. They share their thoughts and think about the ideas of others.

A book club is a great place to make friends. You might know some members in your book club if some of the book-club members go to your school. By spending time with them at book-club meetings, you will get to know all the members better.

Would you like to be in a book club? It is easy to start one. All you need are some other members and a place to meet. Library meeting rooms and parks are good places. Being a member of a book club is good for you. It is also a lot of fun. Why not join or start a book club today?

- B. try very hard to finish

- B. Other members will push you to read in a book club.
- C. It's hard to understand the new words when you read fast.
- D. It's a good idea to join a book club with members from your school.

The Secret to Learning Languages

A lot of people think that they are not good at learning a new language. However, experts say that we can all learn from the behavior(行为) of good language learners to become better at languages.

Good language learners look for chances to hear and use the new language outside of the classroom, as a result, they learn the language more quickly. If they're studying in a country where the language is spoken, this is easy to do. For example, they can talk to salesmen, join sports clubs, or even talk to people in coffee stores. However, if they are studying in a country where the language is not spoken, there are still ways to practice outside of class. They might read newspapers and magazines in that language, watch movies, listen to the news, or join chat rooms. All of these are great chances to practice and can also be fun.

What's more, good language learners try different ways to make their message understood. For example, if they do not know the word for "laundromat", they might say "the place where you can wash clothes". If that does not work, they might even try drawing a laundromat with washers and dryers, or acting. The point is that good language learners are creative and do not easily give up. Because of these qualities (品质) they can learn more and better.

Finally, good language learners are prepared to take risks. They think that making mistakes is natural and is necessary to learn. As a result, instead of being uneasy by a mistake or getting upset when they do not understand, they see it as earning a learning chance. For example, if they do not understand what someone said the first time, they are not afraid to ask them to repeat it again and again until they do understand. Or, if someone corrects their vocabulary or grammar, they try to remember instead of becoming shy about speaking.

Learning a language well takes time. However, looking for chances to practice the language, trying different ways to communicate, taking risks, and being prepared to make mistakes will help you become a skilled and confident language learner in the long run.

53. How can you become better at languages according to the experts?

54. Why do good language learners learn a language more quickly?_

55. What do good language learners do if they don't understand what someone said the first time?_

56. Which behavior of good language learners do you agree most? Why?

Hello, everyone. I'm Chris. Today I am going to give you some advice on how to get into the habit of writing daily. Firstly, set a time for writing. Choose a certain time to write each day. Common choices include after dinner or first thing in the morning. Try to keep writing at a fixed time to get your brain into the habit of writing daily. Secondly, keep your diary easy to reach. You can take your diary wherever you go. This way, you can write whenever you have an idea. You can keep your diary somewhere you can see it easily. This will help you remember to write every day. Thirdly, don't try to be perfect. Don't worry too much about the rules of grammar while writing. You can correct your mistakes later.
