The song was written by two school teachers in the US. The first words were "Good morning to all." It was a nice, simple song that the children could sing each day. In 1935, a company (公司) called Summy decided to try to be the owner of the song. They said that other people, not the two school teachers, wrote it. In 1988, the Summy Company was sold to a music company. The company said that anyone who wanted to sing "Happy Birthday to You" in public had to pay them.
