Fruit For All

One day in 2020, a high school student named Zach Selby found out a way to help people who need food. The organisations he learned about take extra fruit from fruit trees and give it to local food banks. Selby decided he could start his own group in his neighbourhood. He called the group Fruit For All (FFA). It is a non-profit group that collects extra fruit from homeowners' trees and donates it to local food banks.

To make FFA successful, Selby needed eager volunteers and trees with fruit. Selby asked community members to call or contact him online and let him know whether they had trees with extra fruit. At first, it was difficult to find people who were willing to contribute the fruit in their trees. But as news of Selby's idea spread, people contacted him. Soon, FFA was really "growing"!

With the help of his brother Jack and other volunteers, Selby has gathered and donated more than 70, 000 pounds of fruit to local food banks. The group usually works on the weekends, and the volunteers travel as far as 20 miles from Selby's house. The volunteers usually gather about 500 pounds of fruit each weekend. But one weekend they collected over 2, 000 pounds of fruit!

FFA also has a website that explains the group's goal, which is to inspire people to help. Visitors to the website learn three ways they can take part in. They can allow volunteers to pick fruit from their trees. They can volunteer to pick fruit. And they can start an FFA group in their own area. People who are interested can also use the website to ask Selby and Jack questions and post comments.

More volunteers are joining in. Although the contributions might be small, they can make a big difference. With the help from groups like FFA, more people are able to enjoy delicious fruit.

45. What does FFA do?
- A. It offers fruit classes. B. It grows and sells fruit.
C. It builds a food factory. D. It collects and donates fruit.
