The Well that Changed the World

As a six-year-old Canadian schoolboy, Ryan had trouble believing the words spoken by his teacher that many people in developing African countries couldn't get enough clean water. He looked across the classroom at the drinking fountain. It was very close—only ten steps away. So, Ryan asked himself, “Why do some African children have to walk ten kilometers to get water every day? And why is the water so dirty that it makes them sick?” Young Ryan thought, “Life is easy for me, but hard for those people. Why don't I help?”

At first, his plan was to earn money to build a single well somewhere in Africa. He cleaned windows and did gardening for his family and neighbors. He soon reached his first target (目标) of $70, but when he gave the money to a charity, he was told that it actually cost $2,000 to build a well.

Two thousand dollars was a lot of money, but Ryan didn't give up. He started to ask for help from his classmates and neighbors and persuaded them to donate money. At the same time, a friend of Ryan's mother helped make his story go public. After several months, Ryan had raised the $2,000, with which a well was built near a primary school in Uganda. The children at the school no longer needed to walk for hours to get water. They were grateful to him and invited him to visit.

In Uganda, Ryan at last saw the finished well with his own eyes. But that was not all. He also saw hundreds of delighted students who had turned out to welcome him. They sang and danced happily. Some even offered him food and gifts. At first Ryan was nervous, but soon great warmth filled him. He really had made a difference for these children. He broke into a joyful smile.

Later, Ryan's experience led him to set up a foundation (基金会) to encourage more people to help. Many inspired people gave him their support. Ryan's foundation continues to attract support from more and more people, so the work of building more wells can go on. Today, over 800,000 people in 16 countries across Africa have benefited from the life-changing gift of clean, safe water.

30. The following statements make Ryan decide to help students in developing African countries, EXCEPT _____.
- A. Ryan has troubles understanding the words spoken by teachers.
 - B. Many students are suffering from sickness caused by dirty water.

- C. Ryan thought life shouldn't be so hard for them while his is easy.
D. Many students have to walk a long way to get clean and safe water.
31. How did Ryan raise money to build a well after finishing his first target?
A. By asking his teacher and friends' parents for help.
B. By persuading people around him to donate money.
C. By setting up a public foundation to attract support.
D. By doing some work for his family and neighbors.
32. Which of the following words can best describe Ryan?
A. Kind-hearted and determined. B. Humorous and ambitious.
C. Brave and generous. D. Grateful and hardworking.

C

The bald eagle was once a dying species in the United States. This is because the bird wasn't always held with respect. At the National Book Festival, author Jack E. Davis detailed the bald eagle's "great conservation success story".

The bald eagle has faced extinction twice. The first occurred in the late 19th century. "It was then that a bald eagle seen was one to be shot," he said. He explained that the bird had been regarded as a dangerous animal, and considered a threat (威胁). But such threat tended to be overstated (夸大). Throughout the early 20th century, thousands of bald eagles were shot down. Things began to change for the bird in 1940, when the government passed its legal protection—the Bald Eagle Protection Act.

However, only five years later, the bird faced its second near extinction when DDT, an environmentally harmful insecticide (杀虫剂), was introduced at the end of World War II. In 1963, the bald eagle hit its lowest number—totaling less than 500 nesting pairs across the U.S. "At that time, only about one-third of the nation's water was safe for swimming and fishing," Davis said. "That was eagle habitat, but also our habitat." "We stepped up." He mentioned that this situation led a nonprofit organization, Fish and Wildlife, to launch "hugely successful" eagle protection projects.

By 2007, the bald eagle was removed from the list as the species regained its health, reaching nearly 11,000 nesting pairs nationwide, and today's number is somewhere around 500,000.

For those looking to assist in the ongoing comeback of the bald eagle and other endangered animals, Davis said, almost every state has a center that accepts donations and welcomes visitors and volunteers.

33. What made the bald eagle almost extinct for the first time?

- A. The illegal hunting.
 - B. The loose control of guns.
 - C. The attack from other animals.
 - D. The misunderstanding of their threat.
34. What caused Fish and Wildlife to start eagle protection projects?
- A. The outbreak of World War II.
 - B. The overuse of DDT nationwide.
 - C. The disappearance of eagle habitat.
 - D. The worsening of eagles' living condition.
35. What's the main purpose of the passage?
- A. To tell a story of a dying species.
 - B. To advertise the book of Jack E. Davis.
 - C. To raise the awareness of protecting wildlife.
 - D. To introduce the ways of protecting bald eagles.

Teens who have good, supportive relationships with their teachers enjoy better health as adults, according to a research.

“This research suggests that improving students' relationships with teachers could have important, positive and long-lasting effects beyond just academic success,” said Jinho Kim, the author of the study. “It could also bring about important health benefits in the long run.”

Previous research has suggested that teens' social relationships might be linked to health outcomes in adulthood—perhaps because poor relationships can lead to chronic (长期的) stress which can raise a person's risk of health problems over the lifespan, according to Kim. However, it is not clear whether the link between teen relationships and lifetime health is certainly cause and effect—it could be that other factors, such as different family backgrounds, might contribute to both relationship problems in adolescence (青春期) and poor health in adulthood. Also, most research has focused on teens relationships with their peers, rather than on their relationships with teachers.

To explore those questions further, Kim analyzed data on nearly 20,000 participants from the Add Health study, a national study that followed participants for 13 years, from seventh grade into early adulthood. The participants included more than 3, 400 pairs of brothers and sisters. As teens, participants answered questions, such as, “How often have you had trouble getting along with other students?” “How much do you agree that friends care about you?” “How often have you had trouble getting along with your teachers?” and “How much do you agree that teachers care about you?” As adults, participants were asked about their physical and mental health. Researchers also took measures of physical health, such as blood pressure and BMI (体质指数).

Kim found that, as expected, participants who had reported better relationships with both their peers and teachers in middle school and high school also reported better physical and mental health in their mid-20s. However, when he controlled for family background by looking at pairs of brothers and sisters, only the link between good teacher relationships and adult health remained significant.

The results suggest that teacher relationships are even more important than previously realized and that schools should invest in training teachers on how to build warm and supportive relationships with their students, according to Kim.

36. According to paragraph 3, we can know that _____.
- A. teen relationships with teachers were not studied before.
 - B. family background is the main factor in improving mental health.
 - C. teen relationship is not the only factor that affects the lifetime health.
 - D. relationship problems in adolescence can cause poor health in adulthood.
37. What is paragraph 4 mainly about?
- A. How the research was done.
 - B. What questions were explored.
 - C. How physical health was measured.
 - D. What kind of participants were studied.
38. According to Kim's findings, we can infer that _____.
- A. Good adult health depends on teens' good peers and teachers.
 - B. More attention should be paid to students' relationships with teachers.
 - C. The importance of student-teacher relationships was fully realized before.
 - D. More teachers should be trained to build better relationship with each other.
39. Where does this text probably come from?
- A. A family survey.
 - B. A medical report.
 - C. A term paper.
 - D. A health magazine.

Pranks (恶作剧) are a popular way of making fun of others and getting a laugh. While some experts point out possible negatives, pranking can also decrease stress, raise a smile, and strengthen relationships.

Prank Aliens, a best-selling book, tells a story about a boy named Max who is searching for the greatest prank of all time. His author Matt Stanton once said that pranking in the home can build strong relationships between parents and kids.

“Some of the best relationship-building moments I have with my own kids are when I enter into their space,” Stanton said. “An adult joining in their games can be surprising for kids and bring wonderful moments of joy. It's a great way to demonstrate to our kids that we can laugh at ourselves and still feel loved and safe,” he added.

But playing tricks can come with unintended consequences (后果), said psychiatrist Mark Cross. Pranks that are intended to harm or embarrass can anger the target and even ruin a relationship. However, Cross also added, “Pranking can be good when the outcome is laughter for everyone, including the pranked person. It can be a great release of stress. When you laugh, you breathe deeper, which helps ease anxiety.”

So why not try some pranks? Wrapping vegetables and shoes up as presents for kids on their birthdays always gets a great reaction. Putting plastic spiders in guests' drinks or placing a whoopee cushion on an unsuspecting person's chair is sure to cause a belly laugh. All these might just be good for you and everyone involved.

45. What are the benefits of pranking? (不多于10个词)
46. What are the best moments for Stanton to build relationship with his children? (不多于7个词)
47. When can pranks anger the target or even ruin a relationship? (不多于10个词)
48. In addition to pranking, what other ways can you use to strengthen relationships with family members? (40词左右)
