“Keep your eyes on your own paper” is one of the rules that Mrs. Archer has taught us. It is a simple rule, but it's not a rule everybody chooses to follow.

This morning, I had an experience(经历) with a “rule breaker(违规者)” during an English exam. I felt somebody was watching me a little too closely. I turned my head quickly and saw James who sat right behind me. My eyes caught his and he said in a low voice, “I hope you studied for this test!” I gave him a smile, not sure whether he was joking or not, and returned to my test. This time I leaned(倾身) a little more closely towards my paper, “I can't see!” James said.

“What am I going to do?” I thought to myself. Cheating(作弊) went against my will. I curled(蜷曲) my arm around my answers.

“He's your friend, and what are friends for?”

“You know it's wrong.”

I tapped(轻敲,轻拍) the top of my desk, hoping for an easy way out of this matter. No easy answer came. I just knew I had to do what I felt was right, even if it made James mad. So I guarded(守卫) my paper so that he couldn't see my answers.

When the exam ended, I stood there for a moment, searching for the right words to say to James. "Sorry, James, but you know me well enough to understand how I feel about cheating," I said slowly and softly. "But maybe I could help you study before the next test" "OK, Brian," he smiled. "It might not be easy, but I'll give it a try."

How do students spend their spare time after finishing their homework? Watch TV, play computer games, or go outside to relax? Here's a good example.

Tim and Kerry Meek are both teachers. They live in the UK with their two daughters: eleven-year-old Amy and nine-year-old Ella. Recently, the Meek family has become the focus(焦点) of the whole country after they completed 100 different outdoor activities in one year.

About one year ago, the Meeks decided that watching TV and playing computer games were not good for their children. The Meeks didn't want their children to spend all their free time in front of the TV and become "couch potatoes". They wanted their children to live an active life. So, they set 100 tasks for the two girls to do outside. Although Mr. and Mrs. Meek are not outdoor activity fans, they took part in all the activities to encourage(鼓励) their daughters. It turns out that the two sisters really had a good time joining in activities.

Every holiday and weekend, whether it's sunny, rainy or snowy, the Meeks would set off to try the activities on their list, including hiking, sailing, climbing, skiing, and so on. The two little girls not only had a wonderful time, but also learned a lot of skills from the activities. They were even able to stand up in front of their school to give a talk on giving love to others. "Our friends spend a lot of their free time doing things which are harmful to their health. Luckily, we've had the chance to experience(体验) something different." Amy and Ella also helped their parents to draw up a new list of challenges for the next 12 months.
