Lily's Time Line

At 6:00 pm, Lily got back home with her head down. She was very worried. Today the class teacher asked each student to finish a project(项目)to tell something about their life. Lily thought about it on the way home, but she didn't know how to do it.

Knowing about the reason, her father asked, "Why not make a time line? That is a list of important things in your life."

"Sure!" Lily answered. "Can you show me how?"

Lily's dad gave her a piece of paper, a pencil and a ruler. She held the pencil and used the ruler to draw a straight line. Then her father drew a small line across the longer line at the left end. Above the small line, he wrote, "Lily is born."

"Why did you make that small line at the left end, Dad?" Lily asked.

"On a time line, things are ordered from left to right. The first thing is placed(放置)at the left end and the last thing is placed at the right end."

Lily then wrote the month, the day and the year of her birthday under the first small line.

Next, her dad drew another small line to the right of the first small line. He wrote "Lily learns to walk." above that line. Then he drew another small line to the right of the second small line. Above this line he wrote, "Lily starts school."

"What about when I learned to ride my bike?" asked Lily.

"Right! We should add that," her dad said.

"I want to add pictures." Lily told her dad. She made a drawing of herself riding a bike and glued(粘贴)it to the paper. Her dad put a picture of Lily's first day of school on the time line, too.

Now their work was done. With joy in her eyes. Lily said. "Wow, this time line is a picture of my life!" "It is a picture of your life so far." her dad added. "There is a lot more to come"

“Schools find their after-school programs before don't work.” Caton says. “They're looking for something to free children from worries and help them feel relaxed.” She says children can't sit for an hour-long class, so yoga classes for children should be varied. It means they can have more activities, such as dance s, songs, movements and so on.

Yoga & Wellness studio also gives beginning yoga classes to high school students. “We prepare the mats and walk them through a very beginner -friendly class.” says the studio teacher Adrienne Dolberry. This month a group of 12th graders took part in the class. They learned how to use yoga to relax themselves before a test.

My classmates sometimes ask me, “Jane, is it safe to be vulnerable(脆弱的) and share my story?”

Will it make people not believe in me?

People believe that sharing vulnerability is weak. But it is not true. In fact, sharing vulnerability is a way of facing our life positively (积极地). Being vulnerable and sharing our stories and troubles show we are brave and strong. It is another feeling we need to know about.

Here is an example. There are two teachers. They will teach you how to speak in front of other. The first one talks about his diploma(文凭) from the university. The second shares a story of how he faced fears to find the confidence(自信心) to speak in public for the first time. Which one would you feel closer to? I think it’s the second one.

We have found that sharing vulnerability makes us strong and brave, so now the question is “How to share it in the right way?”

The right way is to share our story from the positive side. In the end, we can learn the lessons and get a powerful encouraging message.

A few days ago, I had my first class meeting and deeply shared how I felt from a positive side. In the class, I felt very vulnerable. But finally I decided to go public with it. So I shared my fears. I shared how my mind was trying to play with me every day and questioned(质疑) if I was good enough. Many classmates had the same feelings. Who doesn’t have trouble every day? Then I shared how I faced my fears. My classmates truly agreed with me and my story brought them closer to me.

Our stories help us find our life purpose (目的). So sharing them becomes a positive thing, not something to fear.

48. The writer thinks that sharing vulnerability makes us _____.

- A. weak and sad B. fun and healthy C. sorry and scared D. brave and strong

49. The writer probably agrees that talking about our vulnerability_____.

- A. makes people feel closer to us B. is something to fear
C. makes people feel less positive D. is something to question

50. The underlined word “them” in the last paragraph refers to(指代)_____.

- A. ideas B. stories C. purposes D. facts

51. What’s the writer’s main purpose in writing this passage?

- A. To let us know what vulnerability is.
B. To show us the importance of stories.
C. To help us face vulnerability positively.
D. To tell us how the writers faced the fears.
