Lost and Found

Bob Russell says he never gave up looking for his favourite 1967 Austin-Healey. It was the first car in his life. One day in 1970, when he was a college student in New York, he came home after a date with the woman who's now his wife, and realized his car had disappeared. Nearly 43 years later Mr Russell was browsing the online market when he found a car that looked like his old one.

All these years he's kept the car's papers and keys. He searched them out, and saw the vehicle registration number on the website was the same as his long-lost sports car. He told the police. They followed the marks of the car down to Los Angeles, and proved it was indeed Bob Russell's Austin-Healey.

Mr. Russell said he paid $3,000 for it in 1968-and-it's now worth eight times that much. He says it wasn't the money that made him to search for it for over four decades – it was the sweet memories that the car held for him and his wife.
